COURT REFUSES TO REINSTATE TRAVEL BAN

IA U.S. Appeals Court refused to reinstate the president's travel ban on people from six Muslim-majority nations, delivering another blow to the White House in a legal battle likely headed to the Supreme Court. In its 10-3 ruling, the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals said those challenging the ban were likely to succeed on their claim that the order violates the U.S. Constitution's bar against favoring one religion over another. The decision, written by Chief Judge Roger Gregory, described Trump's executive order in forceful terms, saying it uses "vague words of national security, but in context drips with religious intolerance, animus, and discrimination." The court questioned a government argument that the president has authority to halt the entry of people to the U.S. For more, see page 9. REUTERS

MISSED WARNINGS IN MANCHESTER CASE

2The Manchester bomber slipped through the cracks despite being reported to authorities multiple times, the Telegraph reported. The reports compiled include: Five years ago, two friends of Abedi separately called a counterterrorism hotline after he reportedly said "being a suicide bomber was OK." Two years ago, Abedi was banned from a Didsbury mosque after confronting an imam delivering an anti-extremist sermon. The mosque reported him to authorities. Members of Abedi's family contacted British authorities to report that he was "dangerous." Authorities knew Abedi's father (who was arrested in Tripoli while giving interviews to the media) was a member of the "Libyan Islamic Fighting Group." Abedi was "known" to UK intelligence officials who were aware he had recently returned to the UK from Libya. METRO

ZUCKERBERG RETURNS AS COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

3One of Harvard University's most famous dropouts, Facebook Inc founder Mark Zuckerberg, returns on Thursday to the Ivy League school to address its graduating class. The 33-year-old tech titan, who dropped out of the college to found the pioneering social network company, has been on a nostalgia trip during the week leading up to Harvard's commencement. On Tuesday, he livestreamed a visit to the dorm room where he started the website he initially called "thefacebook.com," made available just to his classmates. "This is literally where I sat. And I had my little laptop here and this is where I programmed Facebook. It took me about two weeks," Zuckerberg said in the video. "This is where it happened." REUTERS

TRUMP SHOVS FELLOW NATO LEADER AT SUMMIT

4President Donald Trump pushes his way to the front of the world stage in Brussels on Thursday, shoving aside the leader of soon-to-be member Montenegro at a NATO summit. Video showing the leaders caught Trump pushing his way past Prime Minister Dusko Markovic, then confidently adjusting his suit as he emerged in the front of the group, closer to NATO head Jens Stoltenberg. Video of the incident went viral and came as Trump delivered a tough message to NATO allies to dramatically increase their defense spending to ease financial burden to the United States. The NATO mission of Montenegro, which is joining the Western military alliance against stiff opposition from Russia, did not immediately respond to a request for comment. GETTY IMAGES

5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

CANDIDATE ACCUSED OF ASSAULTING REPORTER

5Montana Republican congressional candidate Greg Gianforte was accused of physically assaulting a reporter on the campaign trail on Wednesday, on the eve of a special election to fill the state's lone seat in the U.S. House of Representatives. Ben Jacobs, a political correspondent for the U.S. edition of The Guardian newspaper, said in a Twitter post that Gianforte had "body slammed" him, breaking the reporter's eyeglasses, at a campaign event in Bozeman. Gianforte's campaign issued a statement saying a physical confrontation with Jacobs occurred when the reporter entered the candidate's office "without permission, aggressively shoved a recorder in Greg's face and began asking badgering questions." REUTERS

NY loves footjobs, according to Pornhub

City dwellers are really into moms when they're not playing footsie.

LINNEA ZIELINSKI
@MetroNewYork
linnea.zielinski@metro.us

Whether it's a foot fetish or just a fantasy, foot-job videos are searched for more in New York than any other U.S. city, according to data from Pornhub.

The world's largest porn site dove into their database to dish the most popular porn searches, categories and porn stars in New York, Boston and Philly — and we have the scoop. Out of these three cities, New York alone finds toes tantalizing and searches for footjobs 110 percent more than the rest of the country.

When they're not playing footsie — sorry, we had to — New Yorkers are busy searching for “MILF” and “step mom” videos, proof that they're not immune to nationwide trends in porn searches. Pornhub revealed that searches for “MILF” spike on Mother's Day, and the two mom-centric terms also rank high in both Boston and Philly.

The most frequented porn categories as well as porn searches in New York emphasize the city's broad diversity. “When compared to the rest of the United States, searches for ‘Indian’ are 220 percent more popular in N.Y.C., ‘Latina’ is 103 percent more popular and ‘Asian’ 52 percent more,” Pornhub comments in their blog featuring the data, adding that this illustrates the “diverse ethnicity” of the city. Categories are no different: “Indian,” “Brazilian,” “Latina” and “Arab” all see a surge in popularity of more than 35 percent over the national average.

Perhaps not surprisingly, size seems to matter on all fronts for Pornhub users in The Big Apple: “Big Dick,” “Threesome” and “Big Tits” all rank among the most popular porn categories in New York.

Sorry, New York, you have the size but not the stamina. That award goes to Philly; Pornhub users in the City of Brotherly Love sure have a thing for the ladies, and their average watch time is a full 8 seconds longer than the site's average of 10 minutes and 26 seconds.

Although Boston consciously navigates to feminist porn 20 percent more than the rest of the country by clicking on the “female-friendly” category, New Yorkers might be more into feminist porn than they know. The most popular pornstar in this footjob fantasy haven is Lisa Ann, who's an outspoken critic of extreme porn, bringing attention to what she calls “abusive scenes” and how they're damaging to performers because they “break you down as a woman.” Though she's retired, the stats show no sign of her popularity sinking.

The second most-searched pornstar is yet another woman who could be grouped into the feminist porn category: Mia Khalifa. The 24-year-old adult entertainment actress openly criticizes famous men, including NFL safety Duke Williams and Ole Miss quarterback Chad Kelly, for trying to DM her.

Three prison guards sexually assaulted female inmates

Three male prison guards repeatedly sexually assaulted and raped several female inmates under their supervision at a federal detention center in New York over time periods of up to three years, federal prosecutors said on Thursday.

The guards, who face multiple charges stemming from grand jury indictments that followed a year-long investigation, were arrested and were to be arraigned Thursday in federal court in the city's Brooklyn borough, prosecutors said.

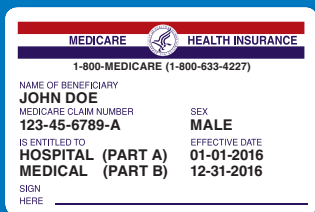

Acting U.S. Attorney Bridget Rohde submitted documents asking a federal magistrate to deny bail for the three guards until their cases come to trial.

“By using their authority and power to prey upon and abuse female inmates in their care, these defendants violated their oaths of public service as well as numerous criminal laws,” said Rohde.

The charged guards are Carlos Martinez and Eugenio Perez, both of whom are lieutenants, and Armando Moronta, an officer at the U.S. Metropolitan Detention Center in Brooklyn. Lawyers for the defendants could not immediately be identified.

Martinez, 47, faces 20 charges of sexual abuse, aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse of a ward and deprivation of civil rights, and could be sentenced to life in prison if convicted. REUTERS

Honor the fallen on the virtual poppy wall

This weekend shouldn't just be about cookouts, sales and a day off of work.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@MetroNewYork

In the 100-plus years since

World War I began, more than 645,000 men and women have given their lives to defend the United States in conflicts across the globe.

While Americans honor those who have served or are serving in various ways, one of the universal symbols of remembrance is a red poppy flower, which originated in 1918 with Moina Bell Michael.

Michael, a humanitarian and college professor, was inspired to always wear a poppy in memory of those who lost their lives in the Great War by the opening line of John McCrae's "In Flanders Fields" war poem: "In Flanders fields the poppies blow / between the crosses row on row."

Today, the poppy remains an iconic military symbol, one that is going digital thanks to a partnership between the United Services Automobile Association (USAA), the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) and the American Legion Auxiliary, whose inaugural National Poppy Day falls on May 26.

"Leveraging the technology of the 21st century, the virtual poppy wall gives a chance to dedicate a poppy to some American who gave the last full measure," John Bird, USAA's senior vice president of military affairs and a retired vice admiral of the Navy, told Metro.

In addition to visiting their local VFW to pick up a handmade poppy flower, this year, Americans can dedicate a virtual poppy at poppyinmemory.com and share it on Twitter and Facebook.

"Often times when these national holidays come along, especially Memorial Day, we tend to focus on the sales in local department stores, the cookouts and a chance to not go to work," Bird said. "What we forget is the importance those Americans who gave so very much for us and our way of life."

Like restaurants, city food trucks now required to publicly post letter grades

Food trucks and carts in New York are now required by law to publicly post their sanitary grades. METRO ARCHIVE

New York is known for having a world-class food scene, and the city's infamous food trucks are just as much a part it as multi-star restaurants.

Like their brick-and-mortar brethren, food carts are subjected to health inspections, but only restaurants must publicly post their sanitary grades. Until now, that is, thanks to a vote this week by the City Council Health Committee.

According to the unanimous vote, food trucks are now required to display their letter grades.

"Everyone who handles food should be subject to the same rules," City Councilwoman Karen Koslowitz of Queens told the New York Post. "People have a right to know if the [eating] conditions are really sanitary."

Koslowitz, a Queens Democrat, told the Post she sponsored the bill in February after she saw vendors serving food past midnight in her neighborhood in Forest Hills.

"Do they wash their hands? It's something the public has a right to know," she said.

Since there was no opposition to the bill, both from the public and food truck vendors, it passed but still needs to be signed into law by Mayor Bill de Blasio. Then, it will take effect within 270 days.

"A vast majority of street vendors support a letter grading system, since it brings increased legitimacy to their businesses. With this more transparent system in place, consumers will have fewer worries about their food being unsafe when they pick up a falafel, a hot dog or a taco on the go," Democratic State Sen. Jose Peralta of Queens said in a statement.

CAN'T TOUCH THIS

I didn't think we'd have to go over this again after kindergarten, but apparently, I was wrong. What are the rules? Play nice. Do your own work. Wait your turn. No sharing secrets with the Russians. And – most importantly – keep your hands to yourself.

This last point has become an issue lately.

Let's review:

In Montana, a congressional candidate allegedly body-slammed a reporter, sending the guy off for X-rays while the police came to charge the candidate with misdemeanor assault. Before the set-to, a major issue there was land use, now it's hand use. As my colleague Brianna Keilar tweeted, "Remember the good old days when political reporters could only expect a threat to be broken in half and thrown over a balcony?" (And yeah, a few years ago, that happened too.)

In Belgium at the NATO summit, President Donald Trump apparently wanted to be in front for the photo op, so – on video no less – it appears he shoved aside the Prime Minister of Montenegro, Dusko Markovic. Considering the population of Markovic's whole country is about 700,000, this is like the Leader of the Free World roughing up the mayor of El Paso. I won't get into President Trump's knuckle-cracking handshake with France's Emmanuel Macron, or the repeated brush-offs he seems to have received from his own wife when he's tried to just hold her hand.

Of course, there was the election in which supporters of numerous candidates behaved badly – after failing to make points, throwing punches instead. All of it paints a political landscape in which, for some mysterious reason, a surprising number of people think it's ok to slap hands on anyone who challenges you, stands in your way, or gets under your skin.

And it's not. Sure, many of us feel pushed at times beyond our limits, and some political/social movements turn violent. But we can't accept that as the norm. It's uncivil, it's destructive, and it's nonproductive for adults in our modern world to push, shove or elbow each other around.

We're not children. We're not the Taiwanese Parliament. Want to effect change? Punch a ballot. Not a nose.

Appeals court refuses to reinstate travel ban

The appeals court questioned a government argument that the president has wide authority to halt the entry of people to the United States.

President Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

In a stinging rebuke to President Donald Trump, a U.S. appeals court refused on Thursday to reinstate his temporary travel ban on people from six Muslim-majority nations, setting the stage for a possible legal showdown in the Supreme Court.

The decision, written by Chief Judge Roger Gregory, described Trump's executive order in forceful terms, saying it uses "vague words of national security, but in context drips with religious intolerance, animus and discrimination."

The White House declined comment and referred questions to the U.S. Justice Department, which did not immediately respond to a request for comment. The administration had said the temporary travel ban would prevent terrorist attacks.

In its 10-3 ruling, the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals said challengers of the ban, including refugee groups and individuals, were likely to succeed on their claim that the order violates the U.S. Constitution's bar against favoring one religion over another.

The case could be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which could make the final decision. The government could also file an emergency application seeking to put the order into effect while the litigation continues.

Gregory cited statements by Trump during the 2016 presidential election calling for a "Muslim ban." The judge wrote that a reasonable observer would likely conclude the order's "primary purpose is to exclude persons from the United States on the basis of their religious beliefs."

The government had argued that the court should not take into account Trump's comments on the campaign trail since they occurred before he took office on Jan. 20. But the appeals court rejected that view, saying they provide a window into the motivations for Trump's action in government. REUTERS

Stealththing may soon be criminalized in New York state

A form of sexual assault called stealththing, when a condom is nonconsensually removed or tampered with during sex, may soon be a felony in New York. ISTOCK

A Queens assemblyman is striving to make the non-consensual sexual assault 'trend' a felony.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Stealththing, a form of sexual assault in which a condom is removed or tampered with during sex without consent, is growing as a practice, and lawmakers are not only taking notice but are also striving to make it a punishable crime.

New York Assemblyman Francisco Moya of Queens is one such legislator. He is introducing a bill that would make stealththing a felony.

"After recent media coverage brought it to my attention, I looked at our current penal law and found that there really wasn't any explicit language classifying this type of assault," Moya told Metro via email. "Especially because this phenomenon is so unknown to so many people, it's important to give prosecutors and judges clear direction. My legislation amends the section of law to put stealththing right next to sexual contact without consent, which is a class E felony with a prison sentence of up to four years."

Under Moya's bill, a person can be charged if they remove or harm a condom or other preventative device like a sponge or diaphragm that they initially agreed to use prior to having sex. Victims of stealththing, which can result in a sexually transmitted disease or an unplanned pregnancy, might not even know they've been assaulted, which was a primary driver of the assemblyman's proposal.

"Because this type of assault is only just now getting the coverage it deserves, there are still many victims who have been unsure of what to think about their own experience and have been suffering in silence," Moya said. "By making it explicit in our court system that this is rape, we send a clear message to everyone who has committed or has thought about committing this crime, and hopefully encourage more victims to come forward to hold their attackers accountable."

Moya is searching for a sponsor for the bill within the state Senate before the legislative session ends in less than a month, the New York Daily News reported.

Should Moya's bill eventually pass, New York would join California and Wisconsin in attempting to criminalize stealththing.

"This is rape. This is nonconsensual sexual assault. We need to call it what it is," Melissa Sargent, a state rep from Wisconsin who introduced a bill there this month, told NBC Los Angeles last week.

California state Rep. Cristina Garcia proposed her stealththing bill last week.

"It's becoming common enough that we have to look for legislation that handles this issue before it becomes out of control," Moya reiterated to the Daily News. "Like with any rape case, it would be on the prosecutors to determine what happens through the use of evidence and testimony."

"This is rape. This is nonconsensual sexual assault. We need to call it what it is."

Geoffrey Rush makes his fifth appearance as Captain Barbossa in "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales."
PETER MOUNTAIN

Geoffrey Rush gets his sea legs

The Oscar winner talks about returning for a fifth "Pirates" and why we need another Albert Einstein.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

In the fifth "Pirates" movie, Geoffrey Rush reprises his long-running character, Captain Barbossa. In the first film, he was the villain. By the third he was a good guy. In the fourth he worked for the king. In "Dead Men Tell No Tales," Barbossa has sold out. He's gone corporate, lording over a fleet of pirate ships that still do pirate-y things.

"The writers keep giving me fascinating new things to do," Rush explains, 65. For the first half of "Dead Men," Barbossa does nothing but sit like a pig in filth—or rather, in his moneyed quarters, which now has a wall of shiny gold skulls. "His wealth brings out the vulgarity of his tastes."

Rush is one of only three actors who've been in all five "Pirates" films, including crew member Kevin McNally and, of course, Johnny Depp, once again hamming it up as unreliable scalawag Captain Sparrow. It reminds Rush of his life before he won his Oscar for 1996's "Shine," before he was a movie star, people like Michael Gove say we should stop listening to "experts."

"Even as we were shooting it, we could feel the rise of nationalism in certain parts of the world. There were so many strong echoes with what was going on now and the totalitarian states in Europe between the wars," Rush explains.

We need more Einsteins right now, Rush feels. "He was such a wonderful anti-hero to have moving through the landscape of late 19th century scientific and industrial development," Rush says. "It was a thrilling time. The motion picture was invented, the motorcar was invented, they were discovering X-rays, there was Marconi. There was so much scientific development, all leading up to a tumultuous period of two global wars, all within a generation. It feels very relevant."

Not that we don't have our own celebrity scientists today carrying on the good fight.

"There's people like professor Brian Cox from the U.K. and Neil deGrasse Tyson," he says. "They're creating very popular, no-holds-barred stories about the cosmos. Luckily, people seem genuinely fascinated by them."

"His wealth brings out the vulgarity of his tastes."

Geoffrey Rush, on where Barbossa is in the fifth "Pirates" when he largely worked on the stage.

"I spent a lot of time in the early part of my career in the theater," Rush recalls. "A lot of that time I was in companies, working with the same writers and directors and actors. You don't get that a lot in film. But on a big saga like these five 'Pirates' films, you do get a chance to go back and get to know people."

The latest "Pirates" isn't Rush's only high-profile gig right now. His show "Genius," in which he plays Albert Einstein, is currently in the middle of its first season on the National Geographic channel. It arrives at a miserable time for much that the brilliant mind stood for—when leaders and large parts of the public question scientists, when they deny climate change, when

In 'Bloodline,' Linda Cardellini takes us to paradise — and hell

The actress wades through the final season of Netflix's thriller set in the Florida Keys.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

Linda Cardellini is deep into some family drama.

The "Freaks and Geeks" actress heads into the third and final season of Netflix's "Bloodline," the Islamorada, Florida-set thriller about a tightly knit family unraveling after the black sheep, Danny (Ben Mendelsohn), returns home. In her turn as daughter Meg Rayburn, the "Mad Men" alumna plays a charming, yet tightly wound lawyer, who does her part to mend the rifts in the family while wrestling with her own demons.

Since Danny met his fate, literally at the hands of the eldest son John (Kyle Chandler), in season one, siblings Meg and Kevin (Norbert Leo Butz) have tried to cover up and recover from the mess. But Season 2 closes with even more bloodshed. Heading into the show's final 10 episodes, airing Friday, May 26, "there's even more splintering of the family," Cardellini tells us. "Where they were trying to survive together last season, now they're trying to survive on their own."

The 41-year-old actress calls in from Boston, where she's filming the comedy "Daddy's Home 2" alongside Mel Gibson, Will Ferrell and Mark Wahlberg — quite a departure from the intensity of "Bloodline."

In a way, Meg and Kevin betrayed John last season. Up until that point, at least, they were loyal to each other.

That's the fun thing about the show: It's all about whose side you're on. Because if you're on Meg's side or Kevin's side, you could look at it like they were just trying to help [John] and they just kept going down this rabbit hole. For Meg, I think she really believes that she picked up the phone and helped her brother, and she didn't kill anybody, but from an outsider's perspective, she was very much an accomplice in everything.

Where do they stand and how guilty are they? It weighs on their own moral center to figure out how they're going to deal with it and live with themselves and with each other. Danny was the scapegoat for them for a long time, and once he was gone, everybody points to the other as the reason their life is miserable.

Meg does a good bit of drinking, especially this season. What's it like playing a lush?

[Laughs] It's always slightly daunting, but it's really fun, too. She's a mess and a lot of times she has feelings she can't really cope with, so that's her coping mechanism. It's been in the family for a long time; the family drinks together a lot and on their own as well. And there are varying degrees of it, too; times when she's just a little tipsy and other scenes where she's just sort of out of it, she's so wasted. It's trying to find degrees of how drunk she is.

The setting is so key to the show. What was it like filming down there and how does the show reflect the culture of the Florida Keys?

The Keys are a very fascinating place. On the one hand, it has this history of people hiding out there after they do strange, nefarious things. And then it has this other part of it, this beautiful, heavenly, gorgeous, tropical paradise. Going there and being there over the past few seasons — it's been beautiful. We'd have manatees come up to where we were living. And then it's hot and it's humid, and the sweat on us is all real. Living in a very sunny place and having really dark things happening ... it's the swamp meets paradise meets hell. [Laughs]

'My Dad Wrote a Porno' is your new podcast obsession

Season 3 of "My Dad Wrote a Porno" premieres May 29.
PROVIDED

Get ready to laugh so hard you cry.

JENNIFER LOGUE
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Looking for a podcast pick-me-up for your morning commute? Try "My Dad Wrote a Porno" on for size. The hilarious U.K. cult hit has been downloaded over 50 million times and has quite the celebrity following already, with Elijah Wood, Michael Sheen and others among its fans. But be warned: People not in the know may think you're a little loopy for laughing so hard to yourself on the train to work.

The podcast was born after Jamie Morton, the show's creator, discovered that his 60-year-old father had taken up a new pet project — writing porn under the pseudonym Rocky Flintstone.

"My dad took me into the study two years ago to tell me he'd been writing some novels," says Morton. "Then he sent me some draft pages and I realized he was writing pornography in his garden shed without my mother knowing."

While most of us would probably immediately seek therapy or try desperately to forget knowing such a thing, Morton decided to share chapters of the book ("Belinda Blinkered") with friends and future castmates James Cooper and Alice Levine at the pub.

"I realized it was the most hilarious novel ever written in the most unintentionally funny way," he says. "My father can't spell, barely uses grammar and his sexual knowledge is absolutely zero."

Upon first experiencing "Belinda Blinkered," Levine admits she "lost her mind."

"Imagine, we're in a nice North London suburb. People are sitting around a week before Christmas, enjoying their pub lunch, and Jamie is reading out bits about people's breasts popping out and brassieres working overtime. It was so good," she recalls.

Cooper adds, "He started reading to us and we critiqued it and laughed at the bad grammar. Then we were like, 'Do we just find this funny? Or would other people find this funny?'"

So far, "Belinda Blinkered" has had many memorable lines, but Jamie, Alice and James all have their favorites.

"I really like when my dad is writing about a sexual encounter and he says, 'And then he grabbed her cervix,'" Morton confesses.

"Her nipples were the size of a 3-inch rivet on the hull of the fateful Titanic," says Levine.

"I like it when he calls the penis, 'the flesh of mankind,'" Cooper chimes in.

The third season of My Dad Wrote a Porno comes out on May 29, and don't worry — there's no shortage of material.

"When I first decided to do the podcast, I went to my dad and said, 'I really think, quite strongly, that you should start writing more of this stuff,'" Morton reveals. "And he was like, 'I've written four books already. I've been working on this for a while.'" ther is also a good sport about the podcast as well.

"He sees the funny side and was onboard immediately," Morton says. "It's all done with love and affection. James and Alice have known my dad for years. It's hilarious. My poor mother!"

THE KNICKS HAVE BEEN A DISGRACE TO NEW YORK BASKETBALL

@sidrosenberg

The turmoil that New York basketball fans have been enduring for now close to two decades could have ended last week at the 2017 NBA draft lottery.

For the first time since drafting Kristaps Porzingis fourth overall in 2015, it looked as though the Knicks had a good chance at adding another promising neophyte to grow alongside the 7-foot-3 Latvian.

This was going to be the moment the tides shifted for the Knickerbockers. So they sent in their former fifth-overall draft pick who was part of the last Knicks team to win an NBA Championship, Walt "Clyde" Frazier, in hopes he would bring them some good fortune.

But who are we really kidding? The New York Knicks get lucky? Not this time. In fact, the Knicks ended up with a lower draft pick than they were slated to have, which did not surprise me one bit.

The Knicks' ineptitude has taken the passion for basketball out of New York City, writes Sid Rosenberg. GETTY IMAGES

This franchise has not been able to help themselves when it comes to acquiring players that can thrive in New York. We thought that Melo was going to be the guy to turn this team around and bring back the passion for basketball that New York City has paved into its concrete.

The 1991 No. 2 overall draft pick and New York City High School basketball legend Kenny Anderson visited "The Bernie and Sid Show" on 77 WABC Radio last week to promote "Mr. Chibbs:

Basketball Is Easy, Life Is Hard," a documentary about his career.

Now, I am not the biggest basketball fan by any means, but talking with him made me realize how passionate New Yorkers can get about basketball.

Anderson reminisced about how even as a high school player, New York City basketball fans reacted to his talents on the hardwood. Anderson said that the hysteria over him in high school was comparable to the hype around LeBron James coming out of high school and that was in the social media-less decade of the 1980s! New Yorkers were excited about having one of the nation's top basketball players hone his skills on the courts of New York City.

Sadly, I think New York's passion for our NBA franchise is not going to resurface anytime soon. There has been far too much off-court controversy that the Knicks have created for themselves over the past 17 seasons.

Most of the problems are to blame on management.

They have refused to commit to a serious rebuild, continue to waste their time with horrendous contracts and try to win by spending money. There is only one team that has time and time again proven that they can buy their way to championships in New York and that is the damn Yankees.

It's time the Knicks stop wasting money on so-called superstars, and acquire some draft picks and young players to rebuild the franchise with a winning identity. It's time for management to stop being greedy and put some real stock in the guys on the court.

Aries Attending a reunion or reuniting with someone you haven't seen for a long time will encourage you to try something new. Personal improvements are encouraged.

Taurus Don't limit what you can do. Take heed of what others are doing and you'll find a way to make adjustments and amendments to suit your needs.

Gemini Stay focused. Someone will take advantage of your energy and enthusiasm. Don't offer to do something for others until you have taken care of your responsibilities.

Cancer Go about your business secretly. If you are too open, you'll be called upon to take on responsibilities that don't belong to you. Don't let anyone take advantage of you.

Leo Shake things up. You can make a difference if you offer your services and show leadership ability. Make your day special by ending it with someone special.

Virgo Problems at work and at home will surface if you choose to argue when you should be laboring to achieve your goals. Work alone and get things done.

Libra Get together with friends and family or do something special with a parent or child in order to get the most out of your day. An innocent comment will be informative.

Scorpio Don't limit what you can do due to budgetary or scheduling reasons. Gauge your time, money and energy wisely so that you can meet your responsibilities with ease.

Sagittarius Make positive changes. Networking will bring you in contact with someone who can help you make adjustments to the way you live or how you present yourself.

Capricorn Big talk and peer pressure can be overwhelming. Get the facts before you let someone coerce you into something that is better for him or her than for you.

Aquarius Changes at home will make you happy, but make sure your budget can cover your plans. Do as much of the physical work as you can yourself.

Pisces Be careful of anyone playing emotional games. Ask direct questions before you agree to get involved in something you don't know enough about. EUGENIA LAST
